Emotion in Motion: Dayton Contemporary Dance Co. works with New Bedford students

May 08, 2012

NEW BEDFORD — Their young faces were studies in concentration as students from the Global Learning Charter Public School and Our Sisters' School worked to master challenging dance moves.

Bending, stretching, reaching here, then there, they challenged themselves with every step.

And when they succeeded, they broke into broad smiles reflecting their delight — and pride — in their accomplishments.

Thanks to the Zeiterion Performing Arts Center, the Global Charter and Our Sisters' students recently enjoyed a foray into contemporary dance. On April 26, through the Z's educational outreach program, the students participated in a special in-school workshop featuring members of the Dayton Contemporary Dance Company. The following day, they attended a performance of DCDC at the Z.

Charter school officials said in a news release that “through these wonderful cultural opportunities, students explore the many possibilities in the arts and also realize the level of discipline and work it takes to be a professional dancer or artist.”

Last year, students at the two schools took part in a similar program featuring the Alvin Ailey II dance troupe.
